

CONFLICT OF INTEREST POLICY OF GOOD PROJECTS, INC.

(effective Friday July 18, 2025)

As an employee, or a member of the Board of Directors, of Good Projects, Inc. (the “Corporation”), you are expected to dedicate your best efforts to advancing the Corporation’s interests and to make decisions that affect the Corporation based on the Corporation’s best interests, free of outside influences. At the same time, the Corporation recognizes that its employees and directors have interests and responsibilities outside the Corporation and that conflicts of interest may arise from time to time.

To provide for the disclosure and handling of situations that may involve conflicts of interest, the Corporation has adopted this Conflict of Interest Policy. The policy applies to all directors, officers and employees of the Corporation. The policy is intended to facilitate the Corporation’s compliance with, but is not a substitute for, state and federal laws governing conflicts of interest and “interested person” transactions that apply to non-profit organizations.

No policy can describe every situation that might lead to a conflict of interest. For this reason, there is no substitute for your own good judgment, and you should ask questions if you are in doubt about a particular situation. If you are an employee, you should contact the President of the Corporation with questions. If you are an officer or director, you should contact the Chair of the Board of Directors of the Corporation.

1. Avoiding Conflicts of Interest

You should try to avoid business and personal situations that may give rise to a conflict of interest. In addition, because the appearance of a conflict of interest can be just as harmful as an actual conflict, you should try to avoid situations that may be viewed as creating a conflict.

2. Definition of a Conflict of Interest

A conflict of interest can occur when your interests are adverse to, or may appear to be adverse to, the interests of the Corporation, or when you may benefit personally from your position with the Corporation or a decision or action you take in the course of your work for the Corporation. A conflict of interest can arise not just from your own interests or activities, but also from the interests or activities of a family member (defined below) or an organization that you or a family member have a significant relationship with. A “family member” includes: (a) your spouse or domestic partner; (b) your parents, mother-in-law and father-in-law; (c) your siblings (including half-siblings) and children (whether natural-born or adopted), and their spouses; and (d) your grandchildren and great-grandchildren, and their spouses.

Examples of situations that could create a conflict of interest include:

- a. Doing business with the Corporation. Providing goods or services to the Corporation in exchange for compensation, or having the Corporation hire or do business with one of your family members.
- b. Financial interests in transactions with the Corporation. Having a direct or indirect financial interest in a transaction involving the Corporation. This includes situations where you or a family member are a director, trustee, officer or substantial owner of an organization that has a relationship with the Corporation (such as an organization that supplies goods or services to the Corporation for compensation, or an organization that leases property to the Corporation).
- c. Gifts. Accepting gifts from people or organizations that deal with the Corporation (see section 5 below).
- d. Personal benefits. Using your position at the Corporation to further your own interests or the interests of another person or organization, or using Corporation assets, labor or information for personal use.

3. Identifying, Reporting and Handling Potential Conflicts of Interest

If you become aware of an actual or potential conflict of interest, you must disclose it promptly by following the procedures below. In addition, conflicts of interest may not always be clear-cut, so you are encouraged to ask questions about particular situations.

Many actual or potential conflicts of interest can be avoided or resolved if they are disclosed and appropriate steps are taken to manage the conflict or appearance of conflict. In some instances, this may not be sufficient and the Corporation may require that the conduct in question be stopped or that actions taken be reversed where possible. If a significant conflict exists and cannot be resolved, the employee or director with the conflict may need to resign from the Corporation. Alternatively, if the conflict involves a relationship with another organization, the employee or director can end their relationship with the other organization.

Employees. If you are an employee, you should report any actual or potential conflicts to the President. The President, or his designee, will review the situation and decide what, if any, actions should be taken in response. These actions may include steps to manage or resolve the conflict, like having the employee refrain from participating in decisions involving the situation where he or she has a conflict or reassigning job responsibilities.

Directors, Officers and “Key Employees.” Special rules apply to directors, officers and “key employees.” “Key employee” is a term that the Internal Revenue Service has defined in the Form 990 tax return filed by non-profit organizations and includes various senior-level employees of an organization (other than officers) whose compensation exceeds thresholds set by the IRS. If you are a director or officer, or have been notified that you are a key employee, of the Corporation, you must complete the attached “Conflict of Interest Disclosure Form” annually. In addition, during the year, if you become aware of an actual or potential conflict of interest, whether it involves you, or someone else associated with the Corporation, you must promptly notify the Chairman of the Board of Directors.

The Board of Directors reviews information obtained through the disclosure process to assess whether any disclosed relationships raise potential conflicts of interest and to determine appropriate steps to manage or resolve situations that may raise conflicts. If there is uncertainty about whether an actual or potential conflict of interest exists, the Board of Directors will consider the matter and make a determination.

4. Additional Procedures Specific to Directors

Where a director has a conflict of interest involving a matter that comes before the Board of Directors or a Board committee, the procedures below apply.

- The director may not be counted in determining the presence of a quorum at the meeting, even where applicable law permits this.
- The director must disclose his or her interest in the matter to the other members of the Board of Directors or Board committee, and describe all material facts related to the matter. If the director has a confidentiality obligation that prevents the director from disclosing any material facts, the director must disclose that obligation.
- The director may answer factual questions from other directors and staff and may briefly state his or her position on the matter.
- The director must recuse himself or herself from deliberations on the matter.
- The director will abstain from voting on the matter and will not be present during voting.

The minutes of the meeting where the matter is considered will reflect that: (a) without counting the director, a quorum was present; (b) the director disclosed the conflict of interest and material facts (to the extent not confidential) about the conflict of interest, to the Board of Directors or Board committee; (c) the director abstained from deliberations and voting on the matter; and (d) the action that the Board of Directors or Board committee took on the matter.

5. Gifts

Giving gifts to, or accepting gifts from, people or organizations that work with the Corporation, or are seeking to work with the Corporation, can create a conflict of interest as well as the perception that gifts were made to influence your decisions or actions. Gifts of nominal value (less than $100) generally are permissible, but you should use reasonable judgment in deciding whether it is appropriate to accept them. You may not accept a gift — regardless of its value — when doing so may influence, or be perceived as influencing, a decision or action.

6. Compliance

The Board of Directors is responsible for administering this policy. As part of this responsibility, the Board periodically receives reports about any conflicts of interest and reviews compliance with the policy.

The Board also periodically reviews the policy to assess whether changes are appropriate and approves any changes to the policy.
